

ABSTRACT

Method and apparatus to optically measure properties of a metallic film using an excitation beam and a probe beam. The excitation beam creates a surface acoustic wave in the metallic film while the probe beam causes electron density waves (plasmons) in the metallic film. The detected intensity of the reflected probe beam indicates, e.g., a thickness of the metallic film.